Post Test

In Consultation - Page 15) Feeling sorrow, angst, and worry without receiving recognition or validation from others or society in general is called:	<input type="radio"/> disaggregated grief
	<input type="radio"/> disenfranchised grief
	<input type="radio"/> disembodied grief
	<input type="radio"/> displaced grief
Reflections on the Divorce Revolution - Page 18) According to Doherty, over the past two decades academic literature has strongly supported the consensus that children do best in:	<input type="radio"/> stable, healthy, no-conflict unmarried families
	<input type="radio"/> unstable, high-conflict married families
	<input type="radio"/> stable, reasonably low-conflict married families
	<input type="radio"/> none of the above
Reflections on the Divorce Revolution - Page 18) Doherty coined the term marriage friendly to signal to colleagues and clients that he believes:	<input type="radio"/> divorce should never be an option
	<input type="radio"/> restoring marriages to health rather than divorce should be the goal whenever feasible
	<input type="radio"/> only therapists who’ve been through divorce should work with divorcing couples
	<input type="radio"/> none of the above
Reflections on the Divorce Revolution - Page 18) “Therapy for an age of complexity” means:	<input type="radio"/> therapists look first at restoring attachments but accept the client’s ultimate decision
	<input type="radio"/> therapists look only for ways to help clients divorce gracefully
	<input type="radio"/> therapists set the ultimate agenda for the client
	<input type="radio"/> all of the above

Rowing to Nowhere - Page 26) One of the unusual characteristics of Real's work is that he takes sides and believes that not all problems are 50-50.	<input type="radio"/> True <hr/> <input type="radio"/> False
Rowing to Nowhere - Page 26) Real believes that unhappily staying together most often:	<input type="radio"/> gives children a more stable life with their parents <hr/> <input type="radio"/> gives children a template for intimacy that's unsatisfying and dysfunctional <hr/> <input type="radio"/> gives the parents satisfaction in having done what's right for their children <hr/> <input type="radio"/> none of the above
Rowing to Nowhere - Page 26) From a family therapy perspective, transformation and dissolution both:	<input type="radio"/> begin with crisis and start off looking different <hr/> <input type="radio"/> begin with tears and end with laughter <hr/> <input type="radio"/> begin with crisis and start off looking the same <hr/> <input type="radio"/> none of the above
The Intentional Divorce - Page 32) Nelson's framework for an intentional divorce includes:	<input type="radio"/> crisis, when the finality of their decisions triggers a state of shock in clients <hr/> <input type="radio"/> insight, as partners do the deeper work of letting go <hr/> <input type="radio"/> vision, in the form of a completion ritual <hr/> <input type="radio"/> all of the above
The Intentional Divorce - Page 32) A collaborative divorce is one in which:	<input type="radio"/> the couple works together without legal counsel to end their marriage <hr/> <input type="radio"/> the therapist brings in a colleague to consult on the case <hr/> <input type="radio"/> each partner hires a separate collaborative divorce attorney <hr/> <input type="radio"/> none of the above
The Intentional Divorce - Page 32) During the insight phase, Nelson views her role as holding:	<input type="radio"/> the couple's hands as they work on intimacy issues <hr/> <input type="radio"/> the couple's grief and helping them create a new vision <hr/> <input type="radio"/> sessions in which the couple's friend voice opinions <hr/> <input type="radio"/> none of the above
Writing on Water - Page 38) By cutting back his clinical hours to half of what they were, the quality of Treadway's clinical presence and concentration returned.	<input type="radio"/> True <hr/> <input type="radio"/> False
Writing on Water - Page 38) Treadway believes that people dealing with Alzheimer's is a clinical population he can help because he's:	<input type="radio"/> studied Alzheimer's patients extensively <hr/> <input type="radio"/> walked a mile in their shoes and knows there are more miles to come <hr/> <input type="radio"/> talked with countless caregivers about their experiences with Alzheimer's patients <hr/> <input type="radio"/> none of the above
Case Study - Page 51) When working with gay male couples in negotiating open relationships, Miller urges them to:	<input type="radio"/> consider keeping their relationship primary <hr/> <input type="radio"/> be honest with each other about what's comfortable and uncomfortable <hr/> <input type="radio"/> set guidelines <hr/> <input type="radio"/> all of the above

	<input type="radio"/> Rebels
	<input type="radio"/> Questioners
	<input type="radio"/> Thinkers
Bookmarks - Page 61) For author Robert Putnam, social capital is a crucial measure of:	<input type="radio"/> the sturdiness of the fabric of society
	<input type="radio"/> the sturdiness of the caste system in America
	<input type="radio"/> the sturdiness of our moral fiber
	<input type="radio"/> none of the above
